ABSTRACT

Title of Document: LITERARY JOINT ATTENTION: SOCIAL COGNITION AND THE PUZZLES OF MODERNISM
Vera L. Tobin, Ph.D., 2008
Directed By: Professor Mark Turner, Department of English

The fundamental claim of this project is that the mechanics of social cognition—how we think intersubjectively and process social information—are highly relevant to the study of literature. Specifically, it presents a theory of literary discourse as the emergent product of a network of joint activities and joint attention. Research on joint attention frequently focuses on contexts in which this aspect of social cognition is not fully developed, as in autism and early childhood. The study of literature, on the other hand, is continually engaged with circumstances in which joint attention is relevant, highly developed, and complex. Here, linguistics and cognitive science provide the basis for specific and particularizing claims about literature, while literary texts are used to support broader theoretical work about language and the mind.

The focus is on modern literature in English and its reception. Many of these texts exploit systematic egocentric biases in social cognition and communication to produce effective ironies and narrative surprises. Further, both detective fiction and
